Reading with the Stars A Celebration of Books & Libraries

Many notable individuals, like the "stars" quoted on our newsletter cover, have credited the Library with providing them with the tools that they needed to attain personal freedom and inspiration. Libraries have always been the cornerstone of education and enlightenment, and reading has been the avenue to empowerment and opportunity. Is it any wonder that some of the most productive and influential people in the world are avid readers and Library advocates?

Perhaps you've seen the American Library Association's series of READ posters featuring various celebrities; or maybe you've read a particular book after hearing a recommendation from someone you admire. Maybe you belong to a book discussion group that stretches your imagination; or maybe you have a specific personal goal that can be realized by doing research. Whatever your reason or motivation for picking up your next read, the best place to get that read is at the Library. And remember, now you have the opportunity to enjoy books in a variety of formats including print, audio, and downloadable versions.

National Library Week (April 8-14, 2012) reminds us all to use the Library and tap into the power of reading to achieve our goals. Join a roster of individuals who have found the support and the empowerment that they needed through the Library and books.
